J. R. KEENE'S OPERATOR TOOK A FLIER IN HOCKING.

W. J. Ronan, in Mr. Keene's Employ, Sold 420 Share: of Hocking Before the Pool Smashed-Wouldn't Take Chances-Denial That Keene Knew.

How James R. Keene's private telephone operator made $50,000 in Hocking Coal and Iron on the morning of January 19, 1910, when the Keene pool broke and the stock fell from 88 to 25, was told yesterday in the continued bankruptcy Edward and Job Sutterly of Trenton, proceedings of Lathrop, Haskins & Co. before Stanley W. Dexter, referee.

W. J. Ronan, the operator, who lives at 155 South Fourth street, Brooklyn, was reticent about his flier in Hocking. It was his own business, he said, with many shakes of the head at William S. Mr. McGuire started the day's inquiry by an attempt to prove that Ronan was in Mr. Keene's confidence and that on one occasion at least Mr. Keene had transacted business in Ronan's name. This was when a telegram had been received by Ronan, directed to him, which he recognized as one he had been instructed to turn over to Mr. Keene.

Some time previous to the breaking of the pool, Ronan said, he had opened an account with the firm of Albert Locob & Co., now Rothschild & Co., with about $1,000. Mr. McGuire, with data from the books of Loeb & Co. before him, wanted to know if the first 470 shares of Hocking Only Interest to the market," said Ronan. "Not a mill, not a mill," and Ronan shook his head violently at his inquistor.

Mr. Mooney, of personal counsel for Mr Keene, protested at the insituation of the question. Mr. McGuire said that in view of the fact that Ronan had been shown to have been at least once in the confidence of Mr. Keene and that his dealings in Hocking Coal and Iron were apparently quite considerable, even for a telephone operator. he thought the question was justified.

Ronan's examination wound up with a little fuss about his salary. He did not want everybody to know that, and appealed so vigorously to the referee that Mr. Dexter allowed him to write it on apiece of paper and hand the slip to Mr. Mc. Guire. Asked what amount of money he possessed before he became mixed up in Hocking. Ronan said that he had an account of $5,000 in the United States Mortgage and Trust Company.

"I made it speculating in Wall Street," he said.

Ronan added that since his experience in Hocking he had made some $1,000, the whereabouts of which had vanished from his memory.
